

CONTENTS

Prologue	1
1. THE TRUTH IS WHAT WE WANT IT TO BE	7
The danger of only talking among ourselves	13
Dangers of framing, schemas and heuristics	15
2. GEORGE GASCOIGNE SECONDARY MODERN – A PERSONAL VIEW	21
And so to the secondary modern	22
Life after George Gascoigne Secondary Modern	28
3. A CONSISTENTLY NEGATIVE IMAGE	31
4. A CONDENSED HISTORY OF SECONDARY MODERNS	43
When to start? What to include?	44
How it was researched	48
The history timeline	57
5. BETWEEN THE WARS	65
Something must be done	70
Change and austerity are not good bedfellows	72
The emergence of the Labour Party’s education policy	74
Let’s draw breath at this point	83
Yet another report about education policy	85
WWII and its effect on children’s education	94
While the country fights WWII, politicians and educationalists ponder education policy	96
Three types of children require three types of school?	99
So much talking – so little achieved	103
6. BIRTH AND DEATH	105
The rush to evacuate	106
The first defeat of the war	108
The education infrastructure suffers a deep and lasting trauma	109
Butler and his Education Act	116
What the Butler Act did (and did not) contain	127
The Labour Party takes control	134
The new secondary education	144

The 'baby boom' and its repercussions	156
The LEA development plans	167
Tough times. Tough decisions	182
A long and painful birth followed by an early death	191
The end of the bipartisan education policy	194
Making decisions on instinct rather than research	200
The muddle of examining secondary school children begins	203
The decline and fall of technical schools	206
What were secondary moderns supposed to be doing?	208
The 'second chance' that technical colleges provided	211
Education policy determined by politics	216
Facts (not suppositions) about secondary moderns	221
Research reports reveal flaws in the tripartite system	232
The Suez Crisis dominates the political agenda	246
Increasing focus and spending on education	248
Problems facing secondary schools – especially secondary moderns	251
Secondary modern pupils and exams – the battle continues	260
The 'bottom half' of secondary modern pupils – the forgotten group	274
Still little clarity about teaching the non-academic child	282
At last the school-leaving age is raised	285
The times they are a-changin	287
The Labour Party rebrands its views of grammar schools	290
An insight into the public's attitude to secondary schools	295
Was the LEAs' rejection of the tripartite system overstated?	299
Slowly becoming more 'academic'	304
Starting the next experiment – 'going comprehensive'	307
The beginning of the Crosland era	317
Government is distracted by other priorities	325
Social upheaval influences a new generation of teachers	329
LEAs apply the brake to Labour's 'go comprehensive' plans	331
Secondary moderns morph into comprehensives	333
'Going comprehensive' – the antithesis of evidence-based policy making	335
The Plowden Report – mixed messages about comprehensives	343
The rise of parent power	345
'Window dressing' rather than progress	347
'A scream of pain'	350
'A botch-up job from the start'?	352
A new political party in power, a new minister of education – Mrs Thatcher	355

Secondary moderns under Thatcher	361
At long last the school-leaving age is raised – just about	364
To sum up – what did actually change over the 30 years?	371
7. THE COMPREHENSIVE ERA	378
Central government v the LEAs – a familiar story	379
Bad marks for progressive teaching	382
The ‘great debate’ begins	389
Labour lays the foundations for the Conservative policies of the 80s	393
So begins the Thatcher era	398
Lots of ‘consultation’ but little direction	403
A+ for thinking but C- for effectiveness	414
Joseph’s grand design for improving schools	418
The new GCSE is launched despite widespread criticism	421
Yet another attempt to provide technical and vocational training	426
So much needs changing, so little achieved	429
The ‘landmark’ Education Reform Bill	432
Labour’s central and local government politicians shift to the left	436
Conservative education policies span the political divide	441
‘New Labour’ jettisons Labour’s education policies	449
Comprehensives become an embarrassment	453
Blair has his ‘Thatcher moment’	464
The comprehensive era – RIP	469
What was the legacy of the comprehensive schools?	476
8. MUCH MALIGNED OR MONSTROUS MISTAKE?	487
An era of good intentions and then there was WWII	489
Secondary modern’s birth and parentage	494
An impossible job	499
What was the purpose of secondary moderns?	501
The secondary modern’s supposed failures	507
Comprehensives an unattainable ideal or a practical solution?	538
9. HALF A CENTURY ON – WHAT LESSONS CAN WE LEARN?	554
Step 1. What do we want from our schools?	556
Step 2. More reasons for poor policy making	580
Step 3. Implementing educational policies: one step forward, one step back	589
The same mistakes – the same problems	598

APPENDIX A	601
George Gascoigne Extended Course
APPENDIX B	608
Analysis of publications
APPENDIX C	620
Definitions of educational institutions
Notes	631
Acknowledgments	651